USDOT Guide on Meaningful Public Involvement

JUST RELEASED!

A set of promising practices to help transportation practitioners across all modes incorporate meaningful public involvement into each stage of the transportation decision-making process and project lifecycle.

A guide to help USDOT funding recipients meet the requirements of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, planning regulations, and other existing requirements.

A product of USDOT's Equity Action Plan to help individuals and communities have a greater voice in transportation decisions affecting them.

Core content helps leaders in all modes of transportation in various roles – including policy, planning, engineering, operations, civil rights, grants and program management, environmental justice, and public involvement – understand meaningful public involvement, why it's important, and how to build organizational capacity for it. www.transportation.gov/public-involvement

- Capacity Building: Activities designed to improve the ability of an organization to design and implement the necessary technical, financial, business, data analysis, and management skills of grantees to access Federal funding, meet Federal requirements, undertake statewide and metropolitan long-range planning and programming activities, and implement other activities that broadly support project development and delivery. This includes developing long-term community capacity to sustain partnerships and engage nongovernmental partners; leadership and workforce development; and program evaluation.
- Planning: Efforts that support inclusive and meaningful public participation and community engagement in developing and implementing a range of activities to identify, assess, and evaluate community needs, including but not limited to environmental reviews, data and mapping visualization, market and mobility studies, health and safety impacts, and climate vulnerability assessments. Planning assistance may involve developing or designing for a program or project that aligns with the goals of the DOT Strategic Plan.
- Technical Assistance: Programs, processes, and resources that provide targeted support, knowledge or expertise to a community, region, organization, or other beneficiary to help them access and utilize Federal funding to develop, analyze, design, and deliver transportation plans and projects.
